TRIFLES IN RAILROAD MANAGEMENT

Making trifles count in railway management is the novel plan adopted by the Pere Marquette line. To pay for one postage stamp, they say a railroad must haul one ton of freight a distance of three and one half miles.

By impressing that startling fact and many facts like it on their thousands of employes, a number of railroad companies in this country are trying to make each employee do his bit toward economizing in little things.

"Save a nickle a day for the company," is the slogan of one railroad system, addressed to each individual it employs. Those behind this economy movement believe that the men will realize after a while that saving money for the company by eliminating waste in trifling things will make for the general prosperity of the companies employing them, and by that way will better their own chances of increased pay.

They appeal to their employes to cut out the trifles, waste in time, coal, waste, spikes, nails, oil, etc. They also give a list of what each trifle means, not in terms of money but in terms of freight tonage: for instance, the loss of one lead pencil means the hauling of one ton of freight two miles; a track bolt equals the hauling of one ton of freight three and one-half miles; a pound of waste equals the hauling of one ton of freight ten and one-half miles; one hundred pounds of coal equals the hauling of one ton of freight twenty miles, and many other trifles they mention which show the men the importance of economy.

It is not only true of railway management that the little things must be looked after, but in every class of business the thing to do is to cut out the trifles.

HOME PRIDE SHOULD BE SHOWN

AT OUR COUNTY FAIR

Did you ever go to your county fair? Did you ever have swine and cattle on exhibition at Hardinsburg? Did you ever have a thrill of pride in what your own neighbors are doing? Whether you can answer these questions in the affirmative or not, we urge you to get ready for The Three Big Days. Go over to the county seat and go the first day of the fair, don't wait until the second or last day but go the first. Be the first fellow on the ground if you can and make a reception committee of your own self. We need a great deal of county pride to figure strongly in the annual county exhibition this year, so lend your support.

At the county fair you meet your old friends, your best friends and this annual gathering makes the tie of friendship grow stronger. That fried chicken, those dressed eggs and those big slices of home made cake! And the races—all these things besides real wholesome fun all day long. You owe yourself the trip. You can get reduced rates on the railroad. The trains stop right at the grounds, which are every day growing more attractive. There is plenty of shade and no dust on the ground, something you don't find at other county fairs.

In this issue of the News appears the announcement of Mr. D. H. Severs, of this city as a candidate for the Legislature. Mr. Severs' announcement is made subject to the action of the Democrats of the county on that subject, of course. Being a life-long Democrat he would not run in any other way. Mr. Severs has some knowledge of legislation, having spent one session at Frankfort as a member of that body. He is a man of experience in public affairs, having spent a term as sheriff, besides being a member of the Legislature. He is well-known to most of the people of the county, and being conservative on all questions that may affect their interests; we think that any matter affecting their interests can be safely entrusted to his hands. He asks the nomination because he believes he can carry the party to victory in November. This is the character of man the party needs; a man of ability, a man of experience, and one who can defend the parties interest whenever it is assailed.

Like sitting down to the dinner table with the liveliest member of your family absent is to set at your desk, picking up the exchanges and find Col. W. P. Walton's editorials missing from the Lexington Herald. He wrote on everything from the town pump to the United States government, including everything that is humanly interesting. Mr. R. W. Brown, managing editor of the Louisville Times, says that the hardest thing for a newspaper man to do is to get a divorce from his work. We hope Col. Walton will not attempt it and that his separation from the press will not be long.

Judging from the number of Breckenridge people on summer outings and pleasure trips east, there surely is not a more prosperous county than ours. We are pleased that our folks are able physically and financially to take these little journeys, to meet new people, to see different sights and grasp fresh ideas of social and business life. It speaks well for Kentucky to have her largely represented every summer in the east. This is personal advertising for the State and no one who goes away would speak except in glowing terms of "The Old Kentucky Home."

The wise man or woman in crossing a railroad track, always stops, looks, and listens.

LITTLE STORIES WRITTEN

While The Press Thunders

BY LOUISE

Do you ever leave your home simply to go down in town without telling someone that you have left the house? There are few homes without this one rule of letting others know when you have left. "I am gone", are often the last words followed back to mother or someone about the place. A person, who is used to this, can scarcely go away even for an afternoon or a few hours without calling that he is leaving. It is just like taking out an accident policy, and, somehow, you have a lighter heart. In the mountains of Kentucky and West Virginia the people when leaving always say to the host: "Come go home with me!" I know a little girl who says when she makes her departure, "I'll come back again". There are many sweet farewells and nearly every person has one of his own liking. No matter if it is no more than one word—that much is better than going away in silence or rushing off mad!

The girl who has a steady in her home town doesn't deserve so much credit for dressing up and looking sweet all the time. Any girl will primp up for the man that she likes above all other men, but the girl, whose suitor lives away, should be given the compliments for trying to look her best six days in every week or twenty-nine days in the month. Energy it takes to put on your good clothes and you can hear women say daily, "I would rather stay at home than to take the trouble to dress up". Girls who haven't a beau far or near, might beautify for the unknown. A little inspiration is better than none at all.

Mr. T. Trammell, an official member of The Sun Varnish Company, of Louisville, and owner of a handsome touring car, tells some funny experiences that he has had automobiling.

Mr. Trammell takes trips south and north in his car. You would be surprised to hear him tell how people take advantage of automobilists. "Country people have more sense than they are given credit of having". He said that the tourists had to pay more for eggs or for any produce they bought at the country-side stores. Gasoline cannot be gotten for less than twenty-five cents by the man with the automobile who needs ten gallons more to finish his journey. One place Mr. Trammell got a black-smith to put a screw cap on his machine and he charged a quarter. "I am willing to pay you your price", said Mr. Trammell, "but tell me, if you did the same job for a man with a buggy how much would you charge?" The black-smith stood silent for a minute then in all seriousness he spoke out: "To tell you the truth, me wouldn't charged him a dam cent."
